The h-index is an index that attempts to measure both the productivity and impact of the published work of a scientist or scholar. The index is based on the set of the scientist's most cited papers and the number of citations that they have received in other people's publications. According to Harzing’s Publish or Perish software, my h-index is 44 (Harzing, 2007) and my publications have been cited over 8964 times. Harzing’s software utilizes Google Scholar, which is broader in coverage than the Thomson Web of Knowledge. Google Scholar includes academic journals listed in ISI, as well as academic journals not listed in ISI but available on the Internet. According to Harzing, “Google Scholar also includes citations in books, conference proceedings, white papers, and government reports.” The average number of citations per paper for Psychiatry/Psychology is 8.24 (Iglesias & Pecharroman, 2006). My average number of citations per paper is 88.41 with an average number of citations per year of 324.19.
